

ABSTRACT

Disclosed is a telecommunication switching system for switching incoming and/or outgoing calls with several or different branch exchanges, comprising at least one input channel and at least one output channel which is connected to a branch exchange. The output channel provides both a voice connection and a control connection giving direct access to the operator-relevant PBX functionality of the branch exchange which is connected via the output channel.